How do people develop in their important relationships? How do two people come together to form a new close relationship? How do relationships affect or determine who we are and who we become? These questions should be central to the study of mind and development, but most researchers neglect relationships and focus instead on analyses of individuals as if people were basically alone, experiencing occasional fleeting moments with other people. Research based on this individualist assumption has dominated the behavioral and clinical sciences, but there are other voices, and they are growing. In this book, many of the scholars who are moving relationships and attachments back to the center of human development outline their central concepts, findings, and perspectives. People are fundamentally social, and relationships are part of the fabric of being human, forming an essential foundation that molds each person's mind and action. A mind does not reside in one person but in relationships and communities composed of many people's interconnected minds, which mutually support and define each other from the start and throughout life. Each person develops strengths and vulnerabilities in important relationships. In communities and cultures, those relationships are so central to each person's activity and experience that without them, no scientific explanation can even begin to analyze mind and action. There is no mind without other people; there is no psychological vulnerability that does not involve others. The contributors to this book aim to establish a firm foundation for the role of relationships in human activity and health and to promote strong research by bringing together in one place most of the best research and theory on development and relationships. Their goal is to stimulate a more radical inclusion of relationships in mind, an ecological focus on the ways that relationships constitute action, feeling, and thought.

Social Exchange in Developing Relationships is a collection of papers that deals with the systematic study of the development of relationships. The papers discuss several theoretical perspectives such as evolutionary theory, personality theory, cognitive developmental theory, equity theory, role theory, and attribution theory. One paper discusses romantic relationships, the evolution of first acquaintance to close or intimate commitment. Another paper presents the hypothesis that the factors causing a relationship to begin will also probably steer intermediate cognitive processes, eventually influencing the nature of the relationship commitment requires specific concepts such as input levels contributed to the relationship duration of these inputs and their consistency of occurrence the equity theory suggests that equity principles determine the selection of one's mate and how they the partners will get along in the future one paper analyzes the dynamic theories of social relationships and the resulting research strategies that the conceptualization of a parameter of a social relationship can affect the choice of data collection techniques and other matters sociologists psychologists historians students and academicians doing sociological research can benefit greatly from this collection the effort to understand personal relationships has traditionally focused on the individual characteristics of participants personal relationships and personal networks takes this analysis a step further focusing on research linking participants feelings and actions within a given personal relationship to the larger social context surrounding it author malcolm r parks expands on the idea that the initiation development maintenance and dissolution of relationships are inextricably connected to each participant's social network a perspective that allows for a better appreciation of our connection to the world and a greater understanding of our significant power as social actors this book offers a new way to consider basic notions about how relationships form such as how particular people meet and how relationships are started among many findings the volume demonstrates that individuals in relationships feel closer and generally more connected when they also have a greater amount of contact with the members of each other's personal networks and when they believe that network members support their relationship additional topics discussed include how this social context model is applicable to different types of relationships how participants interact with network members how social networks are involved in the deterioration of personal relationships and what drives change in relationships students researchers and professionals in a wide variety of disciplines such as communication psychology sociology anthropology family studies clinical psychology public health nursing education and social work will find this book useful as will anyone seeking to better understand their own personal relationships
