the preoccupation with the historicity of thought and existence is central to the hermeneutic phenomenological branch of modern philosophy its foremost representative is martin heidegger who in his main work sein und zeit 1927 developed a theory of historicity according to which human beings not only exist in history but are themselves historical in subsequent writings heidegger argued that not only man but also truth and being must be understood historically in a particular sense the meaning and the implications of heidegger s historicization of philosophy are here analyzed along two parallel tracks as a theory of the conditions of philosophical understanding second as an incentive to new ways of responding philosophically to these conditions the study focuses on the sense of belonging which heidegger assigns to historicity as a dialogical relation to an enigmatic origin that cannot be exhaustively articulated but to which understanding must nevertheless respond in repetition and critique the idea of the hermeneutic situation and what it means to occupy such a situation is shown to be central in this regard heidegger s historicization of the philosophical territory is interpreted as an exemplary attempt to preserve philosophy as a quest for origins in the explicit recognition of the interminable historical mediation of thinking his approach leads to a critical questioning of fundamental philosophical distinctions such as the temporal and the eternal the absolute and the relative subject and object and of truth as correspondence eventually he is led to question the ability of language to express the historicity of thought and of being which can only be indicated by means of concepts such as moment augenblick and event ereignis in seven chapters the theme of historicity is explored from different angles which together provide a guide to heidegger s path from a philosophy of life to a thinking of being in the other beginning the study covers the full range of his writings but it emphasizes the development from the earliest lectures over sein und zeit to the second major work beitrag zur philosophie 1938 published posthumously in 1989 abstract title summary field provided by blackwell north america inc all rights reserved
