the doctoral thesis argues that the term subcreation with its revised and broadened definition in part differing from J. R. R. Tolkien's original term subcreation may be used for the discussion of the making of fictional worlds in literary discourse. The successful conception of a fictional world depends on the reader's willing suspension of disbelief; this depends both on the author and his skilled composition of the world and all its aspects as well as on the reader's acceptance of this invented fictional world. The author needs to create a narrative with an inner consistency which is crucial to achieving the effect of the reader's immersion in the fictional world. The fundamental aspects that an author needs to realize to achieve successful subcreation have been structured into and analysed in four categories: language and linguistic variation, physiopoeia, anthropoeia, and mythopoeia. Furthermore, this thesis shows that as contemporary examples of fantastic literature both Tad Williams's and Terry Pratchett's fictional worlds are successfully created through the realization of these aspects of subcreation. Apart from commenting on the success of the subcreative process, this thesis also remarks upon the cultural influences both authors include in their writings while both may be considered anglophone in a general categorization. Pratchett's Discworld retains a feeling of Britishness that is not to be found in Williams's Otherland. The thesis proposes several approaches to subcreation that may be studied subsequently so, for example, it may be possible to determine the success of an author's subcreation by collecting empirical data apart from literary works. This field of studies may also include other media.

Neare Burvelle is the second son of a second son destined from birth to carry a sword. The wealthy young noble will follow his father, newly made a lord by the King of Gernia, into the cavalry training in the military arts at the elite King's Cavella Academy in the capital city of Old Thares. Bright and well educated, an excellent horseman with an advantageous engagement, Neare's future appears golden but as his academy instruction progresses, Neare begins to realize that the road before him is far from straight. The old aristocracy looks down on him as the son of a new noble and unprepared for the political and social maneuvering of the deeply competitive school and city. The young man finds himself entangled in a web of injustice, discrimination, and foul play. In addition, he is disquieted by his unconventional girl cousin, Epiny, who challenges his heretofore unwavering world view and by the bizarre dreams that haunt his nights for twenty years. The King's cavalry has pushed across the grasslands, subduing and settling its nomads and claiming the territory in Gernia's name. Now they have driven as far as the barrier mountains, home to the Speck people, a quiet forest dwelling folk who retain the last vestiges of magic in a world that is rapidly becoming modernized. From childhood, Neare has been taught that the Specks are a primitive people to be pitied for their backward ways and feared for their indigenous diseases, including the deadly Speck Plague which has ravaged the frontier towns and military outposts. The dark evening brings the carnival to Old Thares and with it an unknown magic and the first Specks Neare has ever seen.
