a collection of six critical essays on the hardy novel arranged in chronological order of their original publication thomas hardy was an english author of the naturalist movement although in several poems he displays elements of the previous romantic and enlightenment periods of literature such as his fascination with the supernatural he regarded himself primarily as a poet and composed novels mainly for financial gain the bulk of his work set mainly in the semi fictional land of wessex delineates characters struggling against their passions and circumstances in a fit of drunken anger Michael Henchard sells his wife and baby daughter for five guineas at a country fair. Over the course of the following years he manages to establish himself as a respected and prosperous pillar of the community of Casterbridge, but behind his success there always lurk the shameful secret of his past and a personality prone to self-destructive pride and temper. Subtitled a story of a man of character, Hardy's powerful and sympathetic study of the heroic but deeply flawed Henchard is also an intensely dramatic work tragically played out against the vivid backdrop of a close-knit Dorsetshire town.

The man was of fine figure, swarthy and stern in aspect, and he showed in profile a facial angle so slightly inclined as to be almost perpendicular. He wore a short jacket of brown corduroy, newer than the remainder of his suit, which was a fustian waistcoat with white horn buttons, breeches of the same, tanned leggings, and a straw hat overlaid with black glazed canvas. At his back he carried by a looped strap a rush basket from which protruded at one end the crutch of a hay knife, a wimble for hay bonds being also visible in the aperture. His measured, springless walk was the walk of the skilled countryman, as distinct from the desultory shambling of the general labourer. While in the turn and plant of each foot there was further a dogged and cynical indifference, personal to himself, showing its presence even in the regularly interchanging fustian folds now in the left leg, now in the right, as he paced along.

the mayor of Casterbridge from Thomas Hardy

Set in the fictional town of Casterbridge, The Mayor of Casterbridge is Thomas Hardy's tragic story of Michael Henchard, who over-indulges in alcohol at a county fair and decides to auction off his wife and daughter to a sailor. When he recovers his sobriety, Mr. Henchard realizes his mistake, but it is too late to get his family back. Devastated, he decides not to touch alcohol again for the next twenty-one years. The novel advances eighteen years to find the teetotaling Henchard as the mayor of Casterbridge and a successful grain merchant. When his wife and daughter return to town, a precipitous decline in Henchard's fortune is set in motion. In the end, Michael Henchard, all he values in life, and all those people he loves, to his rival Henchard is a visible proof of the fact that fiction displays the human heart in conflict with itself. A Faustian striver who is ambitious in business, as a corn chandler he becomes mayor but loses the three women who have meant most to him in life. Henchard dies in an obscure hut, desiring to be completely forgotten by the world. As with all of Thomas Hardy's classic novels, the descriptions of the town, folks, and the flora and fauna of Wessex are beautifully written. Hardy is the best regional novelist in all of English literature. This novel is one you should read and enjoy.

A guide to reading The Mayor of Casterbridge with a critical and appreciative mind, encouraging analysis of plot, style, form, and structure, also includes background on the author's life and times, sample tests, term paper suggestions, and a reading list.

From the stunning opening wife-selling scene, at one time a not uncommon phenomenon in England, to the final playing out of his tragedy, Michael Henchard proves to be violent, selfish, greedy, and crude. At the same time, he possesses magnanimity, humility, and a compassion that always pleased Hardy.
