few political phenomena have proved as confusing or as difficult to comprehend as nationalism there is no established consensus on its identity genesis or future are we for example in the process of being thrust back into a nineteenth century world of competitive and aggressive great powers and petty nationalisms or rather are we being flung headlong into a new globalized and supra national millennium has the nation state outlived its usefulness and exhausted its progressive and emancipatory role or has nationalism always been implicated in an exclusivist ethnic and militaristic logic mapping the nation seeks to address these and other questions about the nature and destiny of the national question in the present epoch a comprehensive and definitive reader on the subject with contributions from some of the most significant and stimulating theorists of the nation state it presents a wide range of divergent ideas and controversies leading off with powerful statements of the classic liberal and socialist positions by lord acton and otto bauer there then follows an historical sociological debate between the late ernest gellner and the czech historian miroslav hroch the one stressing the connections between nationalism and the transition away from agrarian society the other emphasizing its variability and real anthropological basis john breuilly and anthony d smith two of the leading british specialists provide a counterpoint to each other with considerations on the respective importance of political leadership and continuing ethnic communities in the construction of nationalist movements gopal balakrishnan in a carefully honed critique of benedict anderson s seminal imagined communities and partha chatterjee from the subaltern studies circle offer crucial insights on the limitations of the enlightenment approach to nationhood as do sylvia walby and katherine verdery with their reflections on the entanglements of nation gender and identity politics sociologist michael mann delivers an authoritative refutation of the chatter about the death of the nation state finally relating the theoretical questions directly to the politics of our time renowned historian eric hobsbawm provocative theorist tom nairn and the outstanding political philosopher jürgen habermas discuss with varying degrees of optimism and pessimism the future of the national project this book examines the biopolitical fetishisation of technology in contemporary practices of war and thus explores how masculinity is being rearticulated within the context of us militarism more specifically it explores the ethico political possibilities of technology and the attending claims that advanced technology are both liberatory and transgressive it seeks to explore a dual question is technology and its attending technologies of power liberating us from the strictures of gendered regimes of knowledge and thus from the deadly politics of war in considering this question the project inquires into the representative practices at work and the ethico political implications therein it does so by tracing various moments of militarism through both techno scientific and masculinist discourses of power thinking through disciplinary and biopolitical sovereign power the book critically engages how in constituting technology through discourses of gender and difference bodies are more and more absent in visual representations and thus realities of war the driving concern is that the more bodily matters are taken up by the military and government institutions the more bodies are disappeared and thus made absent from politics navigating the ethical possibilities and implications of militarism and the constitution of gendered subjectivities requires thinking through the processes by which technology has been constituted in the contemporary war on of terror to the detriment of the living laughing loving body it therefore seeks to ask after the conditions that enable and indeed demand the absence of fleshy bodies in contemporary configurations of techno war this book will be of much interest to students of critical security studies gender studies social theory and ir in general this compelling interdisciplinary compilation of essays documents the extensive intersubjective relationships between gender war and militarism in 21st century global politics feminist scholars have long contended that war and militarism are fundamentally gendered gender war and militarism feminist perspectives provides empirical evidence theoretical innovation and interdisciplinary conversation on the topic while explicitly and uniquely considering the links between gender war and militarism essentially an interdisciplinary conversation between scholars studying gender in political science anthropology and sociology the essays here all turn their attention to the same questions how are war and militarism gendered seventeen innovative explanations of different intersections of the gendering of global politics and global conflict examine the theoretical relationship between gender militarization and security the deployment of gender and sexuality in times of conflict sexual violence in war and conflict post conflict reconstruction and gender and militarism in media and literary accounts of war together these essays make a coherent argument that reveals that although it takes different forms gendering is a constant feature of 21st century militarism this book provides a socio legal perspective to critical military studies by asking socio legal questions about military conscription in turkey how do the international and domestic laws approach the conflict between the law and conscience why does turkey insist on the non recognition of the right to conscientious objection how are those pursuing their conscience affected by such non recognition these questions are important as the law is shaped by the socio cultural structures in which it operates and any attempt to create a social change also necessitates understanding and challenging the legal framework in this light the book argues that one cannot fully understand and as a result resist the militarisation of society without understanding the relationship between the law and social norms this book explores the post national defense and its gender implications specifically it explores how the united nations security council resolution to increase the participation of women in peace negotiations humanitarian planning peacekeeping operations post conflict peacebuilding and governance has influenced the organization and policy practices of the post national defense maintained its predominance over the security sector since the state's independence in 1948 they provide a deeper and more nuanced view of the actual situation and also throw light on the formal and informal arrangements connections and dynamic relations between israel's security sector and the country's civilian sector to include the cultural sphere the political system society the economy and the public discourse issues and events discussed are israel's separation barrier the impact of israel's military confrontations with the palestinians and other middle eastern states and the impact of the wars in iraq and afghanistan the israeli case offers insights about the role of the military and security in democratic nations in contemporary times altınay examines how the myth that the military is central to turkey's national identity was created perpetuated and acts to shape politics tracing how the ideology of militarism is maintained and its implications for ethnic and gender relations she considers the challenges facing turkey as it moves from being a plural to a pluralistic society in idi amin's shadow is a rich social history examining ugandan women's complex and sometimes paradoxical relationship to amin's military state based on more than one hundred interviews with women who survived the regime as well as a wide range of primary sources this book reveals how the violence of amin's militarism resulted in both opportunities and challenges for women some assumed positions of political power or became successful entrepreneurs while others endured sexual assault or experienced the trauma of watching their brothers husbands or sons disappeared by the state's security forces in idi amin's shadow considers the crucial ways that gender informed and was informed by the ideology and practice of militarism in this period by exploring this relationship alicia c decker offers a nuanced interpretation of amin's uganda and the lives of the women who experienced and survived its violence each chapter begins with the story of one woman whose experience illuminates some larger theme of the book in this way it becomes clear that the politics of military rule were highly relevant to women and gender relations just as the politics of gender were central to militarism by drawing upon critical security studies feminist studies and violence studies decker demonstrates that amin's dictatorship was far more complex and his rule much more strategic than most observers have ever imagined
