today's world textile and garment trade is valued at a staggering 425 billion we are told that under the pressure of increasing globalisation it is india and china that are the new world manufacturing powerhouses however this is not a new phenomenon until the industrial revolution asia manufactured great quantities of colourful printed cottons that were sold to places as far afield as japan west africa and europe cotton explores this earlier globalised economy and its transformation after 1750 as cotton led the way in the industrialisation of europe by the early nineteenth century india china and the ottoman empire switched from world producers to buyers of european cotton textiles a position that they retained for over two hundred years this is a fascinating and insightful story which ranges from asian and european technologies and african slavery to cotton plantations in the americas and consumer desires across the globe extract this study begun in mid 1974 looks at what has been happening to the cotton textile industry of eec member countries to their imports and exports of cotton textiles and to consumer demand the study was not designed to forecast the end of the current textile and economic slow down in the community or to project future levels of mill use of cotton rather emphasis is put on the fact that the community will continue to be a large market for raw cotton investigations on the wear of cotton fabrics were conducted by the u s army natick laboratories it was found that the theories of adhesive and abrasive wear originally developed for metals when applied to textile wear problems provide new insights into the interpretation of laboratory and field measures of wear resistance the predominant form of wear of military clothing is of the abrasive type this finding stimulated the development of two instruments which provide essentially the abrasive type of wear these two instruments are described early studies made by the army on the influence of garment fabric weave and weave orientation both in field and laboratory wear were extended to determine their influence on the wear that occurs in laundering with the increase use of resin treatments to produce desired functional properties in military fabrics this type of wear has become more important because of the sensitivity of resin treated fabrics to laundering damage it was found that the location and rate of edge wear in seams is a function of weave type and fabric orientation author during the first half of the nineteenth century the united states emerged as a major producer of cotton textiles this paper argues that the expansion of domestic textile production is best understood as a path dependent process that was initiated by the protection provided by the embargo act of 1807 and the war of 1812 this initial period of protection ended abruptly in 1815 with the conclusion of the war and the resumption of British imports but the political climate had been irreversibly changed by the temporary expansion of the industry after 1815 nascent manufacturers sought to protect the investments they had made by lobbying Congress their efforts had an important impact on the provisions concerning cotton textiles in the tariff bill of 1816 and during the 1820s manufacturers won increasingly strong protection culminating in the passage of the tariff of abominations in 1828
