the superior man bends his attention to what is radical that being established all practical courses naturally grow up filial piety and fraternal submission are they not the root of all benevolent actions to rule a country of a thousand chariots there must be reverent attention to business and sincerity economy in expenditure and love for men and the employment of the people at the proper seasons if a man withdraws his mind from the love of beauty and applies it as sincerely to the love of the virtuous if in serving his parents he can exert his utmost strength if in serving his prince he can devote his life if in his intercourse with his friends his words are sincere although men say that he has not learned i will certainly say that he has without an acquaintance with the rules of propriety it is impossible for the character to be established without knowing the force of words it is impossible to know men the teachings of confucius are arranged in accordance with the 64 hexagrams of the i ching each of the 64 sections presents the reading from his i ching commentary and on the opposite page selections from his analects as a comparative study of the virtue ethics of aristotle and confucius this book explores how they each reflect upon human good and virtue out of their respective cultural assumptions conceptual frameworks and philosophical perspectives it does not simply take one side as a framework to understand the other rather it takes them as mirrors for each other and seeks to develop new readings and perspectives of both ethics that would be unattainable if each were studied on its own
