recent research in the humanities and social sciences suggests that individuals who understand themselves as belonging to something greater than the self a family community or religious or spiritual group often feel happier have a deeper sense of purpose or meaning in their lives and have overall better life outcomes than those who do not some positive and personality psychologists have labeled this location of the self within a broader perspective self transcendence this book presents and integrates new interdisciplinary research into virtue happiness and the meaning of life by re orienting these discussions around the concept of self transcendence the essays are organized around three broad themes connected to self transcendence first they investigate how self transcendence helps us to understand aspects of the moral life as it is studied within psychology including the development of wisdom the practice of moral praise and psychological well being second they explore how self transcendence is linked to virtue in different religious and spiritual traditions including judaism islam christianity buddhism and confucianism finally they ask how self transcendence can help us theorize about aristotelean and thomist conceptions of virtue like hope and piety and how this helps us to re conceptualize happiness and meaning in life can psychology and religion engage in constructive dialogue has psychology a contribution to make in christian formation these are some of the issues addressed in this volume marking 25 years of the institute of psychology of the gregorian university the twenty articles which make up the work offer essential insights into how psychology and religion can meet and interact constructively at the level of theory and of practice these insights are presented in the context of an overall christian anthropology which continues to develop and to further refine its practical applications the contributions are divided into four sections theory and method dialogue between psychology and other disciplines applications in different cultures and concrete experiences of applying a psychologically informed christian anthropology in the educational setting the balanced approach presented in this work makes it both a serious instrument of study and a valuable point of reference for the educator its constant reference to a christian conception of the person will help avoid short sighted pragmatism protestant theology and culture are known for a reserved at times skeptical attitude to the use of art and aesthetic forms of expression in a religious context in transcendence and sensoriness this attitude is analysed and discussed both theoretically and through case studies considered in a broad theological and philosophical framework of religious aesthetics nordic scholars of theology philosophy art music and architecture discuss questions of transcendence the human senses and the arts in order to challenge established perspectives within the aesthetics of religion and theology abraham maslow discovered a natural evolution of adult development moving through meeting increasingly subtle human needs to self transcendence and ego surrender one s ego surrenders by quieting recognizing itself to be a sibling to other aspects of the psyche rather than a parent or an overlord and acknowledging the rightful leadership of the ultimate organizing principle within the transpersonal self the quieting can follow the course of balance seeking a quiet enough ego or of growth seeking an ever quieter ego either choice brings increasing tranquility amidst the challenges of life in today s world because paradoxically an experience of ego surrender and of letting go increases an individual s internal locus of control the deep knowing that what happens to them is a consequence of their own actions transpersonal psychology helps people by escorting them through the layers of their personal work repairing damage done by early abuse and neglect becoming accountable for one s own shadow meeting and befriending the archetypal inhabitants of one s unconscious and developing one s optimal functioning to fulfill one s destiny progress all the way to your highest potential to the higher stages of ego development what abraham maslow called transcending self actualization and what carl jung called individuation transpersonal self actualization is opening our visionary potential clearing away the blocks that have kept us from seeing our own true light our shadows provide sanctuary for our fears but also point the way to our greatest strengths create a vision for the future and develop strategies for achieving that vision an expanded worldview propels you to higher levels of meaning life purpose and identity your real true identity develop mindfulness a witness perspective taoistic receptivity transcendence through humility resilience and serenity experience the higher stages of ego development transcending self actualization or individuation
