though international relations and the rise and fall of european states are widely studied little is available to students and non specialists on the origins development and operation of the diplomatic system through which these relations were conducted and regulated similarly neglected are the larger ideas and aspirations of international diplomacy that gradually emerged from its immediate functions this impressive survey written by one of our most experienced international historians and covering the 500 years in which european diplomacy was largely a world to itself triumphantly fills that gap

william james roosen has written the first general study of european diplomacy in the age of louis xiv which is based on the actual practices and institutions of that era rather than on the writing of early theoreticians though the seventeenth century may not have been a period of great innovations in international diplomacy it provides us with an important illustration of the workings of a system which was well suited to the gradually changing needs of its time and which has been called the best form of diplomacy ever developed dr roosen demonstrates both the obvious differences and the many similarities between diplomatic procedures and practices of the seventeenth century and the twentieth any student of diplomacy and international relations will gain valuable insight and understanding from this study of the early modern diplomatic personalities institutions and practices one of dr roosen s goals in writing this book has been to discover the relationships between the ideological and socioeconomic structures and the diplomatic personalities who have influenced modern diplomacy further he supplies the only available study of the realities of diplomatic practices in seventeenth century europe and provides an excellent basis for comparison with twentieth century international relations in the hope that studying early modern diplomatic personalities institutions and practices should increase our understanding of international relations today there are chapters on the states of europe kings and ministers ambassadors second class diplomats a typical early modern embassy information important objective of diplomatic activity and the variety of excerpt from on the errors and mischiefs of modern diplomacy as based upon the assumed prerogative of the crown in matters of peace and war does it not seem in the highest degree inconsistent that a people who claim the right of exercising through their representatives a summary judgment on all matters of domestic policy from the regulation of the succession to the crown down to the merest parish road bill should have no deliberative authority in matters which concern the territorial and other material interests of the country and its honour before the world its very position as a great nation does it not seem in the last degree absurd that the crown should have the barren privilege of declaring war when it cannot put a soldier afoot or a ship afloat without the previous sanction of parliament is it to be tolerated that the country having made the necessary provisions for carrying on a war having made heavy sacrifices for it in purse and person should see it brought to a close by an ignominious or unmeaning treaty of peace in which mayhap none of the objects with which the war was undertaken are duly considered at the mere will and pleasure of the sovereign and his advisers for the time being without the opportunity of interposing a word of remonstrance or even of suggestion or opinion on the subject an impartial judgment unfettered by party trammels or the prejudices of routine can only answer these propositions in the affirmative and yet whilst all other questions of administrative practice have been and are habitually made the subject of jealous and painstaking scrutiny there has as yet been no attempt at reform in a department of government which it is no exaggeration to say transcends all others in magnitude and importance in justification of the last portion of the above remarks it may be observed that in matters of internal policy and notably in the imposition of taxes a false step on the part of the executive is immediately controllable by parliament and may be remedied before any ill consequences have occurred thus a proposed tax on matches for instance was withdrawn and the desiderated amount made up by imposing an additional penny on the income tax whereas an error in foreign policy whether it be of war or peace or other diplomatic arrangement involving perhaps thousands of lives millions of treasure or the dearest sovereign rights of the state is irrevocable and without remedy until it has run its course about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks.com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works new diplomatic history has turned into one of the most dynamic and innovative areas of research especially with regard to early modern history it has shown that diplomacy was not as homogenous as previously thought on the contrary it was shaped by a multitude of actors practices and places the handbook aims to characterise these different manifestations of diplomacy and to contextualise them within ongoing scientific debates it brings together scholars from different disciplines and historiographical traditions the handbook deliberately focuses on european diplomacy although non european areas are taken into account for future research in order to limit the framework and ensure precise definitions of diplomacy and its manifestations this must be the prerequisite for potential future global historical perspectives including both the non european and the european world
