efforts to fight back against silencing are central to social justice movements and scholarly fields such as feminist and postcolonial studies but claiming to give voice to people who have been silenced always risks appropriating those people's stories lisa propst argues that the british novelist and public intellectual marina warner offers some of the most provocative contemporary interventions into this dilemma tracing her writing from her early journalism to her novels short stories and studies of myths and fairy tales propst shows that in warner's work features such as stylized voices and narrative silences tales that warner's books hint at but never tell question the authority of the writer to tell other people's stories at the same time they demonstrate the power of literature to make new ethical connections between people inviting readers to reflect on whom they are responsible to and how they are implicated in social systems that perpetuate silencing by exploring how to combat silencing through narrative without reproducing it marina warner and the ethics of telling silenced stories takes up an issue crucial not just to literature and art but to journalists policy makers human rights activists and all people striving to formulate their own responses to injustice onookome okomethis collection of essays examines soyinka s post nobel works against the backdrop of his earlier works especially the so called conservative and impossible plays of early soyinka the contributors are concerned with the political tenor and temperament of the post nobel years and the strong presence of the symbolism of ogun the creative energy of soyinka s yoruba cosmology during those years these essays celebrate the achievements of soyinka by acknowledging his ogunian characters which are often the vehicles and victims of a wayward political world the post nobel era also reveals a positive and consistent step toward the dictum justice is the first condition of humanity soyinka s plays from zia with love to beatification of area boys illustrate this intense quest for social and political justice in his home country nigeria in his later works there is a grand narrative about the nigerian state which the contributors privilege as they point out soyinka s ever conscious attempt to reframe the dark hole of a very troubled collective world this volume of essays is distinct from all others because it is the first to make concrete the debate that exists between the pre nobel and post nobel works of soyinka and the exchange of both streams of literary output within different periods of nigerian society
