the theme of the present volume concerns people s response to the natural environment considered at scales varying from that of a house hold plant to that of vast wilderness areas our decision to focus on this particular segment of the physical environment was prompted in part by the intrinsic interest in this subject on the part of a diverse group of sodal scientists and professionals and of laypersons for that matter and in part by the relative neglect of this topic in standard treatments of the environment behavior field it also serves to bring out once again the interdisiplinary nature of that field and we are pleased to have been able to include representatives from geography sodology soda ecology and natural recreation among our contributors we believe that this volume will serve a useful purpose in helping to integrate the find ings and concepts in this presently somewhat fragmented field scat tered as they are over a very diverse array of publications representing a similarly varied group of spedalties it is hoped that the result will be to stimulate future development of this area and to add a measure of in creased coherence to it volume 7 of our series will be devoted to the theme of elderly people and the environment with m powell lawton joining us as guest co editor the titles of the papers comprising volume 7 are shown on page v irwin altman j oachim f wohlwill ix contents introduction master s thesis from the year 2013 in the subject psychology work business organisation grade 2 3 technical university of munich language english abstract when going for grocery shopping some consumers make up their minds about what to buy and write down shopping lists others just go into the supermarket and do not really think beforehand about the things they need although in both situations individuals engage in different ways of decision making on the purchase of groceries when coming home and putting things into the shelf they positively or negatively assess the things they bought whereas in some situations one gets a positive feeling because e g s he purchased all the products on the shopping list in another situation a consumer might end up being bored because s he just bought the groceries which are perceived as useful and did not listen to his her inner voice calling for more than just the fulfillment of utilitarian needs generally consumers can consciously do their purchases and decide for products after thinking on it or can consider a product s attributes and let their intuition decide in the interest of the consumer the question emerges how the consumer decides at best does a consumer receive greater satisfaction from consciously elaborating about the products s he is facing or is it better not to think consciously when facing product choices this question is differently assessed by different models on decision making whereas some authors ajzen 2011 bandura 1986 1997 deci ryan 1985 payne et al 1993 emphasize consciousness in decision making there is also a large number of proponents of unconscious thought dijksterhuis 2004 dijksterhuis et al 2005 2006a 2006b 2006c levine 1996 bargh 2002 and wilson et al 1993 dijksterhuis and nordgren 2006b p 96 argue for the superiority of unconscious decision making by mentioning that conscious thought is constrained by the low capacity of consciousness which results in sub optimal choices with regard to food products this general superiority of unconscious thought is highly questionable on the one hand consumers constrain themselves in taking into account only specific products which respect certain criteria as e g with diabetics and food products with less sugar content on the other hand food products are also bought because consumers want to confirm their conscience by purchasing e g fair trade products which among other things are associated with a fair payment of farmers this is the first human behavior and social environment hbse book to truly integrate and emphasize multicultural material throughout the chapters and to provide readers with an introduction to the realities of practice with diverse populations it provides comprehensive balanced and in depth coverage of the subject matter rather than using a single theoretical approach
