how scientific is economics this question has often been framed by analogies and correspondences made between economics and other seemingly more well established scientific disciplines starting with classical mechanics at the same time economics is likely to be seen in opposition to or in contrast with history where the reliance upon generalizing rules thought experiments and model construction in economics is set against the amassing of particular facts intended to create narratives in history in this new volume turk explores the relationship between economics and history including the often fraught one between economics and economic history making the case that economics does in fact require the proper grounding in history that has so often been ignored this work challenges the attempt to link economics with other more clearly scientific disciplines as flawed and fundamentally wrongheaded a key element of this book is its examination of the gaps and associations that exist in or are seen through linkages with thermodynamics classical mechanics biology literature mathematics philosophy and sociology this exploration is frequently undertaken through study of the work of one or more major figures in the history of economic thought ranging from quesnay and smith through walras and max weber to robinson krugman david and arthur through the possibility of an alternative to the gaps noted in each such comparison the underlying necessary connection between economics and history can be brought out the book concludes by exploring the basis for the positive construction of a historical economics this book is suited for those who study history of economic thought and philosophy of economics economics is changing in the last few years it has generated a number of new approaches one of the most promising complexity economics was pioneered in the 1980s and 1990s by a small team at the santa fe institute economist and complexity theorist w brian arthur led that team and in this book he collects many of his articles on this new approach the traditional framework sees behavior in the economy as in an equilibrium steady state people in the economy face well defined problems and use perfect deductive reasoning to base their actions on the complexity framework by contrast sees the economy as always in process always changing people try to make sense of the situations they face using whatever reasoning they have at hand and together create outcomes they must individually react to anew the resulting economy is not a well ordered machine but a complex evolving system that is imperfect perpetually constructing itself anew and brimming with vitality the new vision complements and widens the standard one and it helps answer many questions why does the stock market show moods and a psychology why do high tech markets tend to lock in to the dominance of one or two very large players how do economies form and how do they continually alter in structure over time the papers collected here were among the first to use evolutionary computation agent based modeling and cognitive psychology they cover topics as disparate as how markets form out of beliefs how technology evolves over the long span of time why systems and bureaucracies get more complicated as they evolve and how financial crises can be foreseen and prevented in the future
