the phenomenal growth of global pharmaceutical sales and the quest for innovation are driving an unprecedented search for human test subjects particularly in middle and low income countries our hope for medical progress increasingly depends on the willingness of the world's poor to participate in clinical drug trials while these experiments often provide those in need with vital and previously unattainable medical resources the outsourcing and offshoring of trials also create new problems in this groundbreaking book anthropologist adriana petryna takes us deep into the clinical trials industry as it brings together players separated by vast economic and cultural differences moving between corporate and scientific offices in the united states and research and public health sites in poland and brazil when experiments travel documents the complex ways that commercial medical science with all its benefits and risks is being integrated into local health systems and emerging drug markets providing a unique perspective on globalized clinical trials when experiments travel raises central questions are such trials exploitative or are they social goods how are experiments controlled and how is drug safety ensured and do these experiments help or harm public health in the countries where they are conducted empirically rich and theoretically innovative the book shows that neither the language of coercion nor that of rational choice fully captures the range of situations and value systems at work in medical experiments today when experiments travel challenges conventional understandings of the ethics and politics of transnational science and changes the way we think about global medicine and the new infrastructures of our lives clinical trials have become key technologies for decision making in the contemporary world their results shape medical practice and determine priorities across health care systems but the work that goes into producing credible data is often hidden medical proofs social experiments draws upon detailed case studies to argue that to understand their value we need to pay more attention to the contexts for these modern medical experiments recovering the diverse ways in which they involve doctors patients and the public the local practices that contribute to their completion and the complex negotiation of their results in professional and statutory institutions presenting research from the uk usa sweden and the netherlands the ethnographic perspective adopted by the authors provides a space to explore the investments of different state market professional and other actors in particular forms of evaluation and the ways in which trial methodologies may be re designed or re imagined to satisfy social and political expectations as such this volume will be of interest to those working in the fields of science and technology studies the sociology and anthropology of medicine and researchers of policy and organisation in health care the experiment must continue is a beautifully articulated ethnographic history of medical experimentation in east africa from 1940 through 2014 in it melissa graboyes combines her training in public health and in history to treat her subject with the dual sensitivities of a medical ethicist and a fine historian she breathes life into the fascinating histories of research on human subjects elucidating the hopes of the interventionists and the experiences of the putative beneficiaries historical case studies highlight failed attempts to eliminate tropical diseases while modern examples delve into ongoing malaria and hiv aids research collectively these show how east africans have perceived research differently than researchers do and that the active participation of subjects led to the creation of a hybrid ethical form by writing an ethnography of the past and a history of the present graboyes casts medical experimentation in a new light and makes the resounding case that we must readjust our dominant ideas of consent participation and exploitation with global implications this lively book is as relevant for scholars as it is for anyone invested in the place of medicine in society includes proceedings of the association papers read at the annual sessions and lists of current medical literature
